Daily options on the FTSE MIB Index

What are daily options on the FTSE MIB?

Daily expiring options are contracts that expire on each working day of the week. Already available on the AEX® Index and CAC 40® Index, Euronext now provides daily option expiries on the FTSE MIB Index. Each daily option is available for trading for five days and expires at 17:30 CET.

Who are daily options on FTSE MIB for?

Daily options suit the trading strategies of those looking to gain short-term exposure on Italy's national benchmark index.

Why trade Euronext daily options on the FTSE MIB?

Daily options facilitate short-term trading strategies, providing greater flexibility to trade and hedge against near-term market fluctuations. The FTSE MIB constituents include world-leading names in sectors such as luxury goods, finance and technology.

Contract specification highlights

Settlement: cash-settled, European style

Trading period: each contract can be traded for five days

Expiry time: 17:30 CET

Key benefits

Enhanced trading flexibility

Daily expiries with a wide range of strikes available give you a high degree of autonomy and flexibility for investments.

React quickly to market movements

You can gain more targeted exposure, positioning around key events such as elections and economic figures.

Benefit from high Theta and Gamma

You can utilise Theta time delay and high Gamma from short-dated options to generate further benefits from small price movements.

Lower time value

Lower time value makes daily options more affordable than longer-dated alternatives.

End-of-month FTSE MIB Index options

End-of-month options on the FTSE MIB Index further expand Euronext's options maturity range.

What does this mean for you?

This additional maturity on Euronext offers more targeted hedging opportunities on Italy's benchmark stock market index. Investors trading structured products, swaps or looking to conduct end-of-month rebalancing can benefit.

Key features

End-of-month expiries

The FTSE MIB Index features three end-of-month expiries per underlying, allowing you to trade options expiring on the last trading day of the current month and the following two months.

Replacement of existing contracts

End-of-month options replace daily option contracts expiring on the last trading day of each month.

Extended expiry times

The contracts expire at 17:30 CET, offering an extended trading window for additional flexibility.

Options are complex financial instruments that involve significant risks and may not be suitable for all investors. Options may result in the loss of the entire premium paid, particularly in the case of daily options, which have a very short lifespan. Options also provide leveraged exposure and may result in disproportionate gains or losses. Retail investors should ensure that they fully understand the characteristics and risks of options before trading. Retail investors who wish to trade on the regulated markets operated by Euronext and require any information or advice in this regard should consult their financial intermediary.
